

Unschooling isn't about doing whatever we like. It's about using the freedom we have to make good choices.

Sometimes making the right choice involves doing something difficult and even unpleasant.

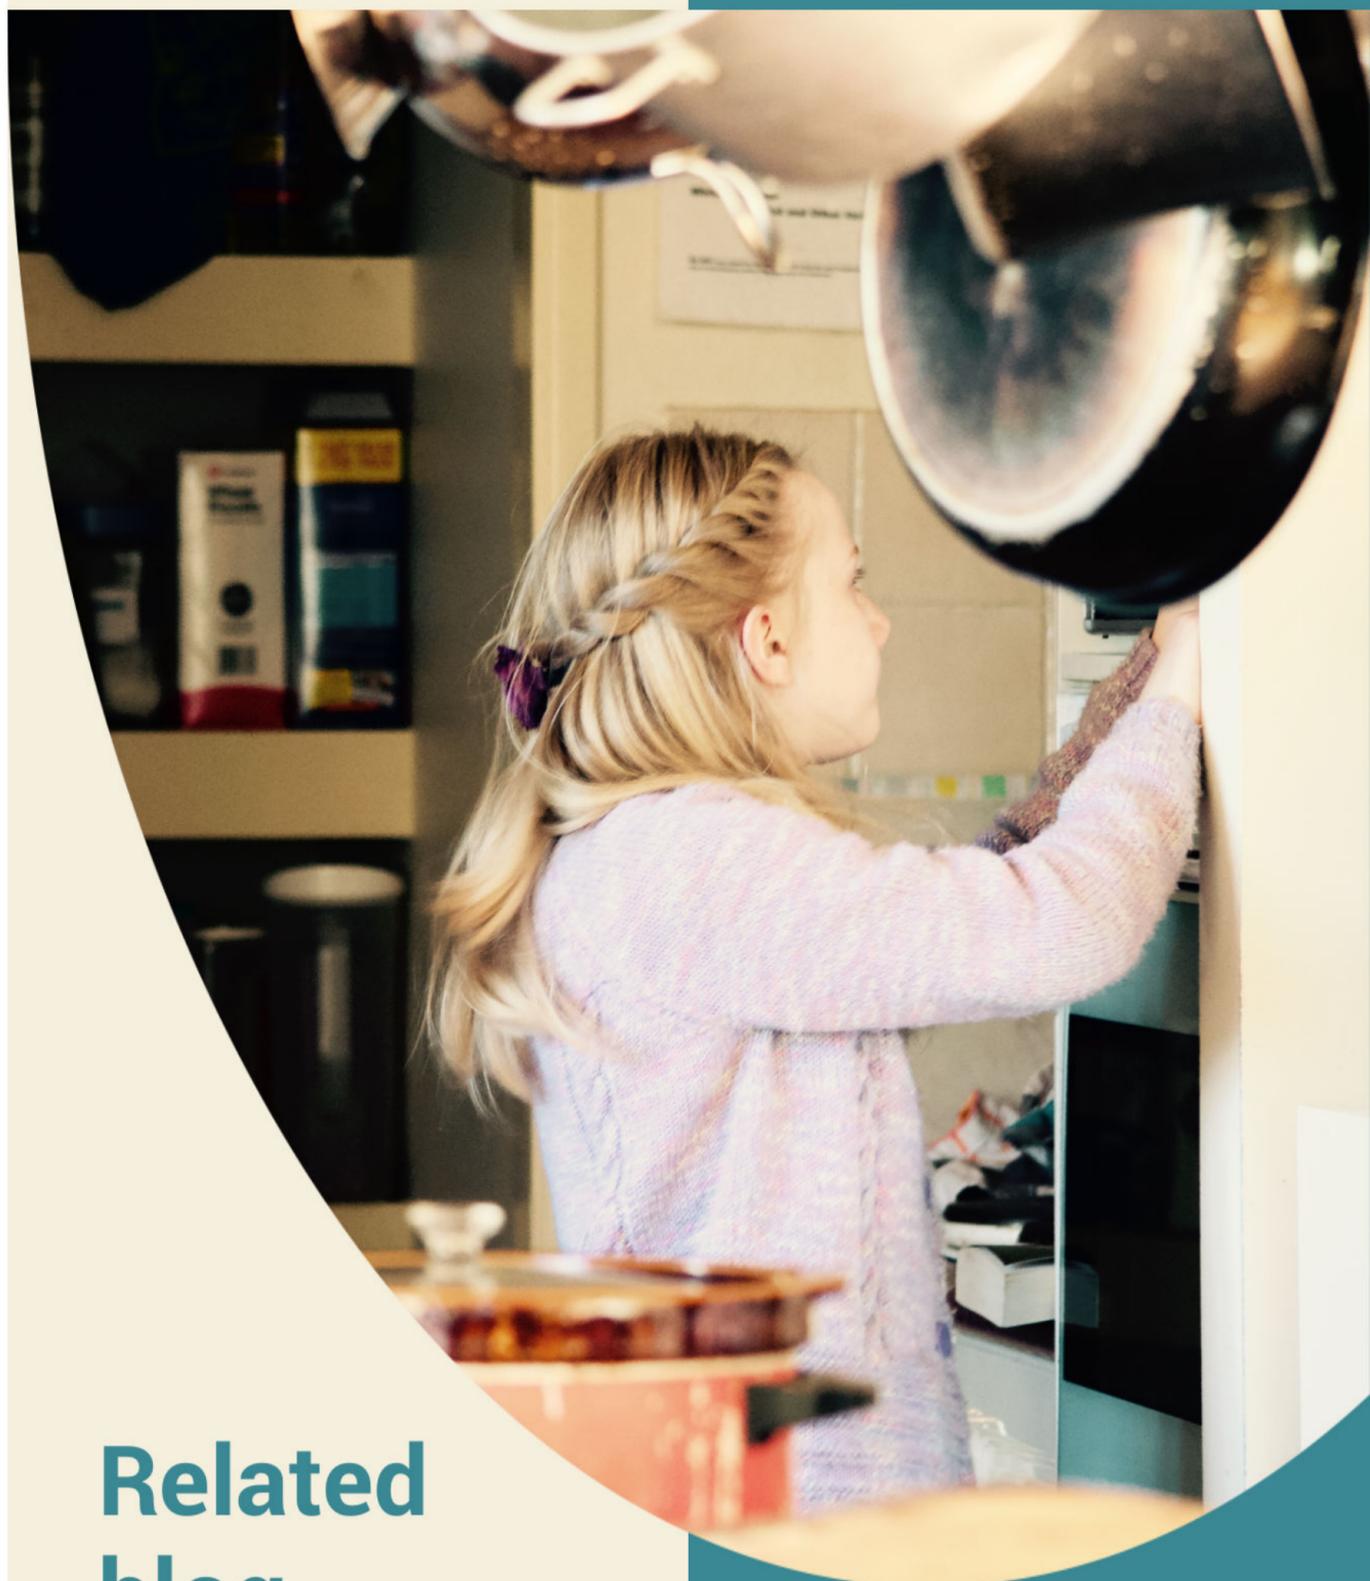

Kids - and parents - will choose to do what is difficult or unpleasant if they see a good reason for doing this.

Working hard can be satisfying. We all need challenges. Kids will choose their own challenges if we trust and support them.

An unschooling life involves both times of visible activity and times of rest and reflection.

Related blog posts

Misconceptions: Unschooling Children Won't Choose to Do Difficult Things

Why We Should Freely Choose to Do Difficult and Unpleasant Things

Unschooling: Making the Right Choices

Stories of an Unschooling Family

Will unschooling kids and parents do nothing if they have a choice?

Find out more